

No mean feet!

IT FELT "like walking through three feet of water for an entire afternoon."

That was the verdict of 12 people who took part in a 13-legged walk for 10 laps around Highbury Fields.

The walkers set themselves the task to raise money for their theatre company, Blast Theory. They need the cash to put on a play at the Union Chapel in Compton Terrace in September.

● More than a walk-on part... Blast Theory on a lap around Highbury Fields.

But the hardy fund-raisers found it was no walk-over as they struggled around Highbury Fields, trying to stop themselves from falling over all the time.

It was a difficult job to keep everyone in step and it wasn't helped by a dog who refused to move out of the way, causing a collision and the line to collapse.

When they finally unstrapped themselves, they were left exhausted and with bruised ankles from the constant tug and pull of the walking. Theatre administrator Erin Frazier said it was a team experience, adding: "It was a really interesting idea because it was so odd."

The Caledonian Road-based theatre company is hoping to raise £400 through the walk for its play Gunmen Kill Three, which examines murder and the value of life.